I'm trying to validate each row of a view so I'm using $this->validate($request, [some arguments]) but doesn't work. When I use $this->validate($request, [some arguments]) in the controller, it works. I know it's not a good approach, but I have to do it this way, since the controller can't get the whole view, but only a part of it. I'm having a form with several rows, and I need to validate each one of them. It seems to be a very basic thing to ask, but I can't find a working answer anywhere. A: This can be done by making sure the validation is in your view. For example: hasErrors() { return View::make('form).
