One of the problems that are encountered by laptop users is the missing of the backlight when the device is closed. At some point, you might want to increase the brightness of the screen to see the text better, and even go to full-screen mode, but if you do not adjust the brightness of the laptop's screen the closed position will be dim, and even interfere with your online experience. However, there is a great chance that you won't have this issue, because most laptops come equipped with the main feature that allows them to achieve the best battery life. The main problem is that a lot of software developers do not take into account the extra power needed when an application is launched. In this case, you will need a utility that adjusts the brightness of the laptop automatically when you launch applications. Given these are some of the most common use cases, we have found some software that help you adjust the screen brightness of your laptop. Among them, Miniature screen-brightness controller is the simplest to use as there is no need to launch any extra application in order to increase the brightness of the screen. Once you start using this application, you will easily notice how the brightness of your laptop's screen has been reduced, and you will not have the feeling that you are wasting power just by browsing the web or watching a movie. With this application, you will finally be able to make sure that the screen of your laptop remains on even when it is closed, and helps you to save power. Furthermore, Miniature screen-brightness controller also works when the laptop is working on battery, and doesn't give any lag as this software launches the corresponding application. This is why it is a good idea to update the software, and there are no such requirements to do it. Do not rely on the wireless network for important data, and do not leave the power on and the screen light on when a laptop is not in use. Use a power plan to turn off unnecessary devices from the screen when your computer is not in use, and you will save a lot of energy. Decrease or increase the screen brightness. Adjust the screen brightness by one step. For most laptops there are two main ways of controlling the brightness: a single button- based menu or the keyboard Fn key. Some laptops include a dedicated brightness control button or key on the keyboard. Pressing this key might either perform a similar function as pressing the menu buttons, or operate as a shortcut for adjusting the screen brightness. On laptops with the Windows logo keyboard, pressing the Menu (Windows logo) key might increase the screen brightness one step (e.g. from low to medium), while pressing the Fn key might adjust the screen brightness from low to high. The Windows logo key is also referred to as function key, Windows logo key, F1 key, NUM LOCK key or the key labeled F11. Laptops with dedicated screen brightness buttons Screen brightness adjustments on laptops with dedicated buttons are usually simpler than the step-by-step methods required when setting the screen brightness using the Menu or function keys. You are presented with a numerical screen brightness slider which is usually shown beneath the screen or display. The slider represents the percent of brightness and can go from 0 to 100. A value of 100 means that the screen is completely on, while a value of 0 means that the screen is completely off. To adjust the screen brightness, you can either press the button to move the slider to the desired position, or you can use the arrow keys. The arrow keys might be used as well to move the slider without releasing the button. When moving the slider to the desired position, keep in mind that in some
