There are many instances where it is desirable to bring a vehicle, such as a boat or a flying boat, to a desired location where it can then be retrieved without the necessity of first transporting the vehicle to a launch location. Desirably, the vehicle can be launched either with or without its engine engaged. More particularly, it is desirable to bring a boat, for example, to a launch location for launching or retrieving purposes, such as for recovering the boat if it has capsized while towing. In such cases, a boat should not be brought to a launch location that could impact against a submerged object such as a dock, pier, bridge, etc. Likewise, an engine should not be engaged in the boat if a submerged object is present, otherwise an engine failure may result. More particularly, by using a launching system that combines a launching ramp with an assisted launch system, the vehicle can be launched safely to a launch location with the engine disengaged or even turned off. Further, the vehicle can be launched by tow means or other means to a desired launch location without the necessity of attaching a launching ramp to the vehicle. The present system provides for such a launching system. A prior launching system is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,974,985, the teachings of which are incorporated herein by reference. This launching system has problems associated with it, such as the necessity of placing, handling and removing the launching ramp; one segment thereof must be removed during launching, thereby requiring lifting and maneuvering the launched vehicle to and from the launching ramp; and finally, the required structure is relatively large and bulky and is very limited in application. Vascular endothelial cells in lysosomal storage diseases. Vascular disease is a common complication of several lysosomal storage disorders (LSD), but the underlying mechanisms are still poorly understood. We have examined seven LSD: four recessive disorders (Mucopolysaccharidosis type IIIC, Sandhoff disease, GM1 gangliosidosis and Pompe disease) and three dominant disorders (lipofusc 1cb139a0ed
